Market developments
A broadly robust month for risk assets to top off a scorching second quarter. Equities posted gains across the board and credit spreads tightened in both emerging and developed markets. Periphery spreads, and specifically in Italy were well supported. Commodity prices were also well bid. With the medical situation remaining worrisome however, and including the US (below) and renewed outbreaks in Australia, China, Iran, and numerous European countries, safe haven assets also remained bid. Treasury yields fell slightly, gold was in demand and equity implied volatility as measured by the VIX was on the rise.

Overall US assets lagged somewhat this month. The S&P and US high yield ran behind European and emerging equivalents, and the greenback was overall soft. Given that economic surprises in the US reached all-time highs, suggesting that data flow came in consistently above low expectations (implying that the economic hit could be less than expected), it was most potentially the deterioration in the health situation in several of the southern US states, which weighed on investor preferences.

Markets continue to be backstopped by significant central bank liquidity injections and expansive fiscal policy. On the former, the Bank of England was a recent addition to the long line of central banks expanding its balance sheet, adding an extra 100 billion pounds sterling. Earlier in the month, the European Central Bank announced another 600 billion euros addition to its pandemic emergency purchase programme (PEPP). The US Federal Reserve reiterated near zero rates until the dual mandates are respected once again, and would keep purchases “at least at the current level”, effectively putting a floor on the minimum purchases with an option to increase if necessary. On the fiscal front, both Germany and Spain added sizable new programs. At the European level, the projected 750 billion euro European recovery fund progresses and will be up for debate again at the next EU meeting mid-July.

Whilst economic surprises have been particularly robust such as retail sales and non-farm payrolls, the absolute level of economic activity remains under stress. In its latest report, the International Monetary Fund revises global growth in 2020 downwards by just short of 2%. GDP contraction is expected at -4.9% this year, of which a -8% contribution from developed markets. Somewhat sobering.

Elsewhere, we observed a few headlines about Sino-US trade relations but the latest tweets by President Trump were not inflammatory. Concerning Mr. Trump, and specifically the presidential elections, preliminary polls point to a sizable lead for the Democrat candidate Joe Biden over the incumbent. In Asia, we observed a renewed flare up in border tensions between China and India as well as between the Koreas, whilst China passed new security laws concerning Hong Kong at the end of the month drawing sharp criticism from the West. Back to Europe, Germany had its “Enron moment” with the Wirecard fraud whilst the Brexit show, after a couple of months pause, is back on the screens.

Portfolio review
Currently, the fund is positioned to generate carry but also capital gains that should come as the spread available in credit markets continues to tighten. The carry is at around 4.6% in euro terms, the duration at around 5.5 years. We remain positioned where the carry is attractive compared to fundamentals and where the central banks or fiscal authority backstop against the risk of downside volatility. This is the case in the European periphery, financials and insurances, as well as some emerging markets. The recent profitable allocation made to investment grade in Europe is being progressively reduced, as the risk premium is diminishing. As we enter the summer period, risk in the fund is being reduced slightly, via creation of cash, or purchase of protection in CDS and duration. We wish to hedge against events that could distract from the long-term normalization trajectory.

Performance analysis
The portfolio delivered both a positive absolute and relative performance compared to the reference index. Performance was mainly driven by tightening in credit spreads as our preferred segments of the market performed well, especially emerging markets. Rates performance was somewhat neutral in a market lacking volatility and any major trends. Unsurprisingly FX, highly skewed to hedging strategies currently, was negative. Asian trading currencies and commodity currencies, of which the portfolio is short, performed well. This was insufficiently offset by the success of a long EUR/USD position, which has been built up recently and which paid off against the background of a soft greenback.

Outlook

We believe that central bank and fiscal authorities are now in a position to avoid another market meltdown (comparable to the one we saw in March).

In our opinion, the US recovery is overpriced by certain markets (i.e. equities and certain high-yield names) especially judging from latest health news (i.e. fear of a second wave of outbreak). The EU recovery, however, should be stronger compared to other developed market countries. For example, stimulus from EU and ECB has been quicker and more efficient. From a health point of view, the emerging market situation could well be worse, but the economic impact should be more contained, as illustrated by the IMF outlook.

The market is already in a phase of rapid normalization. The long period of compression of spreads we saw prior COVID-19 has resumed at a very strong pace. The low-hanging fruit have been picked but there remain numerous pockets of value in spreads markets, which should be supported by the unprecedented liquidity injections from G20 central banks.

Developed market treasury yields should remain at low levels. Currencies could remain one of the few means for some countries to reboot their economies.

We do expect that markets will remain volatile for some time (i.e. second wave risks, China-US tensions, US elections, volatility in macro data vs liquidity injections) which will favor active/flexible strategies in the forthcoming period.
