Vontobel Fund – Euro Corporate Bond

Marketing document for institutional investors in: AT, CH, DE, ES, FI, FR, GB, IE, IT, LI, LU, NL, NO, PT, SE, SG (Professional Investors only).

Investors in France should note that, relative to the expectations of the Autorité des Marchés Financiers, this fund presents disproportionate communication on the consideration of non-financial criteria in its investment policy.

Market developments

As spring began to brighten the weather, financial markets moved in the opposite direction, delivering a distinctly unseasonal chill in March. Most asset classes declined, with the notable exceptions of the US dollar, which appreciated by around 2% versus the euro, and oil, which surged by 63%. European equities were particularly weak, with the STOXX 50 falling 9%, its largest monthly decline since the initial Covid lockdowns in March 2020. At the same time, 10-year US Treasury yields rose sharply by 38 basis points (bps), marking their biggest monthly increase since late 2024, while gold recorded its steepest monthly drop (-12%) since 2008. Credit markets followed suit, with spreads widening across both investment grade (IG) (EUR IG +13bps) and high yield (HY) (EUR HY +63bps), accompanied by increased dispersion. Geopolitical tensions stemming from the conflict involving Iran were a key driver of market dynamics. The associated surge in energy prices pushed headline inflation higher, although resilient underlying demand has so far prevented a broader recessionary environment. The key risk remains that a prolonged conflict could transform the current inflation shock into a growth shock. Our base case assumes a contained scenario in which the US avoids deeper military involvement, Iran does not agree to US demands, and shipping through the Strait of Hormuz resumes slowly. Under this scenario, oil prices are expected to gradually normalize, albeit at a higher level of around USD 80 per barrel.

Central banks broadly met expectations by keeping policy rates unchanged. Both the European Central Bank (ECB) and the US Federal Reserve (Fed) signaled a cautious, wait-and-see approach, while the Bank of England struck a somewhat more hawkish tone. ECB President Christine Lagarde emphasized that the central bank is “well positioned” to manage the energy shock, a view reinforced by Executive Board member Isabel Schnabel, who stressed there is no urgency to adjust policy. Similarly, Fed Chair Jerome Powell noted that while longer-term inflation expectations remain anchored, the Fed is closely monitoring developments and sees current policy settings as appropriate for now.

As a result of the Iran war and higher oil prices, futures markets priced out rate cuts in both the US and UK and even began to price in rate hikes. At one point, there were three hikes priced until year-end for the ECB. Given the weaker macroeconomic outlook, we consider this to be too hawkish. Indeed, the impact of the conflict is increasingly visible in economic data. Eurozone inflation rose sharply to 2.5% year-on-year in March (from 1.9%), driven primarily by energy, while core inflation moderated slightly to 2.3%. In the US, the University of Michigan survey pointed to rising inflation expectations alongside a deteriorating growth outlook. More broadly, PMI indicators softened across multiple regions, and Eurozone consumer confidence fell more than expected to its lowest level in years.

EUR IG credit spreads have been relatively resilient. The fund flow picture has been benign, too, and most funds have built cash balances and did not have to sell into market weakness so far. At the same time, higher all-in yields attracted yield-sensitive buyers such as insurance companies. On average, EUR IG spreads widened by 13bps over the month. Performance dispersion was notable, with real estate and cyclical sectors underperforming (widening by 30bps and 22bps, respectively), while defensive sectors such as utilities and telecoms were more resilient (widening by 11bps and 7bps). Subordinated segments lagged, with financial subordinated debt and corporate hybrids widening by 18bps and 14bps, respectively, and AT1 instruments underperforming more significantly with a 42bps widening.

Portfolio review

In March, we took steps to de-risk the portfolio by increasing our cash position to 5% and reducing exposure to subordinated financials, including a decrease in AT1 holdings. In addition, we implemented hedges via iTraxx SubFin. We slightly reduced overall duration, while positioning for a potential shift from inflation concerns towards recession risks, an environment in which we believe rates are more likely to provide a hedge. In this context, we added Bund futures.

We maintained a defensive sector bias, with an overweight to non-cyclical sectors such as telecoms and utilities and remain comfortable with our allocation to corporate hybrids. In Europe, we observe that the intrinsic beta of high-quality hybrids is declining as the investor base continues to broaden. As a result, attractive opportunities in this segment are becoming more limited, and we aim to deploy capital selectively during periods of market weakness.

We also added longer-duration bonds in high-quality issuers to position for a potential decline in oil prices and yields, while providing downside protection in a scenario of rising recession risks and possible rate cuts. At the same time, we initiated positions in short-dated callable hybrids from solid issuers to enhance portfolio carry.

Primary market activity was more subdued than typically observed at this time of year, particularly in the second half of the month. Against this backdrop, we participated selectively in three new issues.

Performance analysis

The Vontobel Fund – Euro Corporate Bond (I Share Class) underperformed its benchmark in March. Both allocation and selection detracted from performance this month and the curve effect was slightly negative on the back of higher government yields.

From a selection perspective, performance was primarily dragged by higher-beta and more cyclical exposures across banking, insurance, real estate, and transportation. This was partly offset by positive contributions from lower-beta, predominantly non-cyclical senior unsecured bonds with short-to-medium duration.

From an allocation standpoint, our positioning in insurance and transportation, as well as a small overweight in real estate, weighed on performance. These effects were partially mitigated by allocations to consumer goods, financials, healthcare, and utilities.

The hedges implemented during the month did not fully offset market moves, with timing in CDS proving challenging amid volatile headlines and rapidly shifting risk sentiment. While we continue to expect rates to provide a hedge going forward, the simultaneous sell-off in government bonds alongside equities and other asset classes in March limited their effectiveness as a diversifier.

Outlook

Headlines around the conflict with Iran remain highly fluid at the time of writing, with the Strait of Hormuz still closed. The potential economic impact will largely depend on the duration of the disruption, particularly through higher energy prices and the risk of growth destruction. In this environment, we believe trading on daily headlines resembles a coin toss, and we therefore maintain a cautious stance. A more constructive outlook would require visible progress on diplomatic efforts—potentially led by China and Pakistan—following their recently proposed five-point plan, which includes an immediate ceasefire and the reopening of the Strait. While China's initial response was relatively muted, rising energy costs and concerns around global stability appear to be prompting a more active role in supporting de-escalation.

Corporate fundamentals across our investment universe remain solid. Unless energy prices rise materially and persistently, we do not expect a meaningful deterioration that would translate into significantly wider credit spreads.

From a technical perspective, fund flow momentum softened somewhat in March but did not signal a breakdown in demand for the asset class. As long as the situation does not materially deteriorate, we do not anticipate fund flows becoming a significant headwind.

Against this backdrop, we maintain an elevated cash buffer and continue to hedge part of our higher-beta exposure. At the same time, we remain ready to selectively remove hedges and deploy capital into bonds that have repriced to capture attractive carry. The primary market pipeline remains active and we believe it is poised to provide opportunities to add exposure at more compelling levels.
